A Mexican Charro, or a dandy in the regulation and picturesque attire, may still be seen in the cities on festival occasions. The subject of this picture was photographed near the so-called "Iron Horse," a bronze statue of Charles IV. of Spain, which was unveiled on December 6th, 1803. It weighs 60,000 lbs., and is reputed to be the largest single bronze in the world. It was removed to its present position near the Paseo de la Reforma in 1852.
